Project Description/Justification:

This project will use $2 million in FFY2005 federal funding from the Indian Health Service to increase and equip Village Public Safety Officers (VPSO's) in rural Alaskan villages to engage in bootlegging prevention and enforcement activities. $2,000,000 was also appropriated in FFY2004 to the Alaska Department of Public Safety.

Rural Alaska continues to endure high rates of violent crimes such as homicides, sexual assaults, and serious domestic assaults. The majority of these crimes are directly connected to alcohol abuse. This grant will be used to hire, train, and equip additional VPSO's to focus primarily on illegal alcohol interdiction and to enforce other state laws. This will help to significantly reduce violent crime, accidental deaths, and suicide resulting from the easy availability of illegal alcohol through VPSO presence, education, and aggressive bootlegging investigations. The additional VPSO's will be located in rural areas of western Alaska such as the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta, Bristol Bay, the Aleutian Islands, Seward Peninsula, and Kotzebue region.

The terms of the federal appropriation include a maintenance of effort provision requiring the State of Alaska use the funds to enhance or expand existing programs, or initiate new projects or programs, and prohibits use of these funds to supplant existing programs.

The amount allowed for administrative costs, not more than ten percent of the grant award, will be determined when the grant is awarded.
