Project Description/Justification:

The land on which the Interior Alaska Cemetery is to be developed requires that the State of Alaska mitigate, or preserve, the impacts of development to the western end of the property. This section of the property has a portion of the Davidson Ditch, a 90 mile conduit built in the 1920s to supply water to gold mining dredges in central Alaska and is a part of Fairbanks Gold Rush history. Federal law prevents the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs from giving the state any money for the cemetery project until this issue is resolved. This issue was unknown before as it is site specific. Mitigation on this property will include the physical preservation, minor restoration and documentation of the site to provide public information and access to this section of the Davidson Ditch, which will then allow for construction of the cemetery in accordance with current historic preservation laws. The Department of Military and Veteran's Affairs (DMVA) is working cooperatively with the Department of Natural Resources State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) and they will be providing federal matching funds for this project.
